

Dr. Raïssa Malu is a physicist, by training, from the Democratic Republic of Congo. Since 2014, she has been organizing the Science and Technology Week in D. R. Congo to promote STEM among young people and the public. She is an international educational consultant currently coordinating a project within the Congolese Ministry of Education to improve science and mathematics education in secondary and higher education. She has been the Next Einstein Forum Ambassador for the Democratic Republic of Congo. And she is a Member of the Presidential Panel in charge of accompanying the mandate of the President Tshisekedi at the head of the African Union. She is in charge of education, youth, science, technology and innovation.