Local organizing committee, funding support

Local organizing committees from

- Chulalongkorn University; CU
- Thailand Center of Excellence in Physics; ThEP
- Thailand Institute of Nuclear Technology (Public Organization); TINT
- National Astronomical Research Institute of Thailand (Public Organization); NARIT
- Synchrotron Light Research Institute (Public Organization); SLRI

If the proposal is accepted, we expect more local organizing committee from various research institutes and universities who are members of Thai High Energy Physics consortium.

It is positive to find funding support

• For CMS Week 2019, FPCP 2024, AEPSHEP 2024, we got support from the university, research institutes, and private companies. Possibility for limit student support (especially from Asia) to attend the conference (conference fee)

Answers to the pre-meeting questions

Venue

• We propose Bangkok as the conference host city, selecting a venue with easy access to the metro to avoid traffic issues. Currently, Chulalongkorn University and Queen Sirikit National Convention Center are our (my) preferred locations.

Conference fee

• We've based the calculation on full access to university facilities, with a small buffer to account for inflation. We expect this fee to remain stable for the next two years, even if we switch to a conference center.

Day care

• I currently know of a few daycare centers located just a few metro stops away from the university. At the university, I'll need to inquire further, as their childcare services are typically reserved for the children of university staff.

Summary

We propose to host CHEP 2026 in Bangkok, Thailand

Conference venue is at the center of Bangkok

• All proposed conference venues can be accessed with metro systems, fulfil the requirements for CHEP, and surrounded by various hotels

What will we get to host CHEP 2026:

- Increasing visibility of computing in high energy physics and nuclear research in Thailand
- CHEP 2026 will be the major international conference with 500++ participants hosted by Thai high energy physics consortium
- Hosting a major conference is one of the outputs expected from our funding agency
