

Introduction to the White Rabbit network

White Rabbit is an Open Hardware fully deterministic Ethernet-based network for general purpose data transfer and synchronization. The aim is to synchronize over 1000 nodes with sub-nanosecond accuracy over fiber lengths of up to 10 km. The project is led by CERN and is a good example of open hardware collaboration between several large scientific institutions and companies.