

Contribution ID: 227

Type: Plenary

Are SE Architectures Ready For LHC

Monday, 3 November 2008 12:00 (40 minutes)

There are many ways to build a Storage Element. This talk surveys the common and popular architectures used to construct today's Storage Elements and presents points for consideration. The presentation then asks, "Are these architectures ready for LHC era experiments?". The answer may be surprising and certainly shows that the context in which they are used matters.

Primary author: Mr HANUSHEVSKY, Andrew (Stanford Linear Accelerator Center (SLAC))

Presenter: Mr HANUSHEVSKY, Andrew (Stanford Linear Accelerator Center (SLAC))

Session Classification: Monday, 03 November 2008 - Morning session 2

Track Classification: 3. Computation in Theoretical Physics