

CMS and available capacity

- Pledges by site are necessary and sufficient for long term planning
- More detailed information on the available capacity, reflecting variations with time, is nice to have but it is not required
  - It is useful for debugging sites. If we suspect issues, it would be useful to be able to compare actual usage with available capacity
  - If a site does not provide it, it can be inferred from monitoring of past performance and the pledges
  - Providing the information should be totally optional for the site
  - Given the above point, sums of the available capacity make no sense and should be avoided