The building

The San Telmo Museum is housed in a former convent built in the mid-sixteenth century by Dominicans who settled in San Sebastián under the patronage of Don Alonso de Idiaguez, Secretary of State under Emperor Charles V, and his wife Gracia de Olazabal.

The original plan was designed in 1542 by Dominican friar Martín de Santiago, whose idea for the building followed the trends of sixteenth century monastic architecture, not unlike the Dominican convent of San Esteban in Salamanca. Construction began in 1544 and after a series of modifications, was completed in 1562.

Transitional between Gothic and Renaissance, the building is considered the only example in Gipuzkoa of the Isabelline style of architecture.
