Electricity

The standard voltage in Korea is 220 volts, and the standard plug in Korea is the two-pin model commonly used in continental Europe. It is recommended that you minimize the number of electrical items you bring that must be plugged in, or ensure that those you do bring may be safely operated at 220 volts; compatibility information is commonly available on labeling affixed to the item itself. Inexpensive wall socket adapters are commonly available in Korea for use with items that may be safely operated on 220 V electricity.

However, it may be advisable to buy some small electrical items in Korea, as this will save you the cost of purchasing a transformer to enable the use of items that will not operate with 220 V electricity.
