In an age of increasing awareness of the importance of privacy, it is critical for us to take all measures possible to protect personal data

20 JUNE, 2017

CERN is a global organisation that deals with the personal data of people from around the world, and with that comes a certain degree of responsibility. In an age of increasing awareness of the importance of privacy, it is critical for us to take all measures possible to protect personal data and to show that we care about this issue in a very tangible way. This is vital for maintaining the trust of the individuals sharing their information with us, and demonstrating that this laboratory applies the same high-level standards that we apply to our research to everything else we do.

Fully understanding, for example, what data we process, where we process it, who has access to it, and how long we keep it, is key in this era of ever increasing technological and automated handling of information that could be used to identify individuals.

"Before I write my name on the board, I'll need to know how you're planning to use that data."
